

Type A optical cable

Overview

The strain relief boot that protects the fiber from bending at a connector is color-coded to indicate the type of connection. Its most distinctive feature is that it uses a key-up to key-down orientation between the two connectors. A wrong MTP®/MPO polarity connection can trigger costly service disruptions and long, frustrating troubleshooting cycles. A fiber-optic cable, also known as an optical-fiber cable, is an assembly similar to an electrical cable but containing one or more optical fibers that are used to carry light. There are different types of fiber optic cables because each type is optimized for specific applications that have unique requirements for bandwidth, transmission distance, and environmental factors.

The buffer or jacket on patch cords is often color-coded to indicate the type of fiber used. The strain relief boot that protects the fiber from bending at a connector is color-coded to indicate the type of connection. Connectors with a plastic shell (such as SC connectors) typically use a color-coded shell. Standard color codings for jackets (or buffers) and boots (or connector shells) are shown below: Remark: It is also possible that a small part of a connector is additionally color-coded, e.g., the lever o
